-TECHNICAL ANALYSIS-A BRIEF UNDERSTANDING

Technical analysis is nothing more than an analytical tool to predict the next move of the stock prices based on historical price movement using mathematically derived tools and features floated on the price, candles and volume plotted on charts. In other words, in the real life we can compare it with a doctor using basic diagnostic devices like stethoscope, blood pressure monitor, oxy-pulse meter or thermometer to assess and visualize the primary health condition of his patient.

Broader the time horizon for the study, higher could be accuracy. A company listed recently with no much price data, would be difficult to be predicted. In the same way, share price of a company with thin trading volume may also not offer better accuracy for price prediction.

While no prediction using technical analysis can be 100% accurate as there are numerous factors that affect the price of an individual company, but if predicted after proper study, it always gives better results than investing using instinct or randomly investing using 50% of probability chance or even following the news trends.

Moreover, the technical analysis can hardly predict entry and exit at the rock bottom and at the peak respectively. Most chart predictions are between the range of extreme bottom and the peak price of the share.

We at Equitrend180 believe that the fundamental rule of not losing the capital that you have earned with a lot of hardship and sacrifices. Our goal is to identify the timing and prices of a particular stock so that you don't wait indefinitely for your share nor you purchase at the wrong time.

Last but not the least, a technical analysis is incomplete if it does not come with a STOP LOSS or to say, exit from the purchase position with nominal loss, in case, chart prediction goes wrong, typically 10% to 15%.

No matter how rigorous study we do at Equitrend180, like all other technical analysts of the world, we, too, are never correct 100%. So, invest your money sensibly and judiciously in the stock market, preferably using your own savings, and invest as much as you want to risk. Your investment in stocks should not contradict to your essential family requirements and priorities.
